MR. BRENNER: Good afternoon, Chief Judge. May it please the court, my name is Eric Brenner on behalf of appellant Paul Davis. And if I could reserve two minutes for rebuttal, please, Your Honor?

CHIEF JUDGE DIFIORE: You may, sir.

This appeal turns on MR. BRENNER: Thank you. properly distinguishing two conceptually distinct categories of legal rules. First, there are the substantive screening principles that courts apply to determine whether a shareholder has standing to bring a derivative case against the company. Second and separately, there's the jurisdictional issue of who applies the standing test. There is no question that Cayman law includes a screening test that filters out derivative cases in the first category of rules. It's the prime facie case test. It comes from the English Common Law. It was adopted in the Cayman Islands in the Renova judgment that the parties have briefed, and it is undisputedly applicable in this case under the Internal Affairs Doctrine of the State of New York.

The question presented on appeal is whether Order

1 15 Rule 12(A) of the Procedural Rules of the Grand Court of 2 the Cayman Islands creates a second additional substantive 3 rule of law mandating that only a Cayman court can apply 4 Cayman standing principles in a case involving a Cayman 5 company even if the case is being litigated in New York. 6 JUDGE FEINMAN: So - - - so for you to prevail, 7 we would have to find that it's procedural, correct? 8 MR. BRENNER: Our position is that Rule 12(A) is 9 a procedural mechanism as respondent's Cayman law expert 10 says. Yes.

JUDGE FEINMAN: Could you not read 12(A) as sort of the rule embodying the substantive rule of the Foss case?

MR. BRENNER: Respectfully, Your Honor, we do not believe that is a sustainable reading of Rule 12(A) for a few reasons. First of all, Rule 12(A) - - -

JUDGE FEINMAN: But if it were would that then mean that this is a substantive rule?

MR. BRENNER: If Rule 12(A) were akin to the rules of, you know, the Canadian Business Corporations Act, which we reference, or akin to the BVI rules which are substantive exclusive jurisdiction rules which say if you want to bring a case, a derivative case, against a BVI company, there is no question that under the rules of the BVI Companies Law you have to go to the BVI, you have to get permission, and only if you get permission can you bring that case.

JUDGE STEIN: Doesn't Renova essentially say that's what this is even though it's not worded that way?

MR. BRENNER: Renova adopts the prime facie case test which is from the English Common Law and predates Rule 12(A). It's in the - - - the prime facie case test comes from Prudential Insurance. It was a judgment of the English Court of Appeals in 1988. The Rule 12(A) was first adopted in England in 1994, and then it was adopted in the Cayman Islands in 1995. The Common Law - - - the prime facie case test, comes from the Common Law. It predates Rule 12(A). Renova says this explicitly. Their Cayman Law expert says it explicitly. The chronology makes it absolutely plain, and therefore the prime facie case test is the screening principle that courts in the Cayman Islands use to decide whether or not a shareholder can move forward with a derivative case.

JUDGE STEIN: Right. But Renova say that was the purpose of Rule 12(A) to implement that?

MR. BRENNER: Exac- - - I think implement is exactly the right word, Your Honor. As their put it - - - as their Cayman Law expert put it, and this is in paragraph 5 of Mr. Meeson's reply affidavit: "Order 15 Rule 12(A) was introduced simply as the mechanism to ensure that the _	issue could be most conveniently addressed by the court.

2	But the prime facie case requirement predated the
3	introduction of the rule and is the test which is applied
4	by the court."
5	JUDGE FAHEY: So so it is your is it
6	your position, that's a question, really, that 12(A) can be
7	analogized to 3211 in the CPLR?
8	MR. BRENNER: Yes, Your Honor. Exactly. So
9	_
LO	JUDGE FAHEY: All right. So but you do
L1	recognize there are some differences? It it seems to
L2	me that 3211 really talks about allegations and here you
L3	have at least a minimal burden of proof as opposed to a
L4	minimal burden of allegations, as you would under 3211. So
L5	that kind of moves it somewhere between, say, 3211 and
L6	3212.
L7	MR. BRENNER: I'm sorry. I think I misunderstood
L8	your initial question.
L9	JUDGE FAHEY: Yeah. Yeah.
20	MR. BRENNER: I agree it is our position
21	that Rule 12(A) is a procedural mechanism in the same way
22	that CPLR 3211(a)(5) is the mechanism in the New York
23	courts if you want to argue statute of frauds or if you
24	want to argue collateral estoppel. There's a body of jurisprudence that says what the rule is about collateral estoppel, but if you want to make an argument about collateral estoppel in the New York courts, you better bring the 3211(a)(5) motion. You got to make it in the time periods. And otherwise you're not going to get your rights vindicated.

JUDGE FAHEY: Right. Right.

MR. BRENNER: So our view is Rule 12(A) is akin to that. I agree with the second principle which is that 3211 is not on all fours with the standards in Renova that may be applicable in applying the prime facie case test.

JUDGE FEINMAN: Well, so - - - so how is that practically going to play out? You know, under your position a New York court should be able to adjudicate whether this case should be able to go forward. How - - - how is the New York court, practically speaking, under our rules going to carry out this prima facie test?

MR. BRENNER: Sure. As a matter of history, courts have done it under 3211. We cite a number of cases where courts have applied 3211 or Rule 12 to decide these issues. So that's happened. That's happened post-Rule 12(A), that's happened post Renova in the New York state and federal courts. If there is a factual issue of the type that we were just discussing, our position is that New York courts have all the discretion they need under both the Constitution and Judiciary Law to be free to apply whatever procedures they want. I mean, for example, in Renova it says - - - well, in Renova - - -

JUDGE FEINMAN: Well, be specific if you can.

MR. BRENNER: Sure.

JUDGE FEINMAN: Are they going to then vote, you know, there's a particular CPLR section that says you can conduct a factual hearing if you need to to resolve a motion? Is that what you're talking about? I mean specifically how are they going to ferret this out?

MR. BRENNER: Sure. We - - - we cite a number of cases under Judiciary Law 2(b)(3), Your Honor, that say, as the People v. Redding case says, which is a Court of Appeals case from 2009, you know: "Courts may fashion the necessary procedures as they need." We cite I think three cases that have some form of that statement which is essentially New York courts have discretion to adopt what procedures they need to do justice. So if under Renova the rule is the parties need to - - - plaintiff need to submit an affidavit, defending can then submit an affidavit, and then it's up to the court to decide and apply now the prime facie case test, you know, whether or not plaintiff has serious as opposed to speculative grounds or bona fide unreasonable grounds for bringing their claim just as sure as we can make that determination based upon the affidavits just like the Renova court did.

JUDGE WILSON: Suppose we agree with you on procedural versus substantive. Why don't you lose on Foss v. Harbottle anyway?

MR. BRENNER: Well, I guess there are two questions here. One is whether it's ripe for determination. We've obviously briefed it and we'd be glad to have this court decide it, although we recognize there are prudential reasons the court might want to send it to the First Department or there's actually now a new complaint that has been filed as of right. So the factual determination - - - the factual allegations that go to Foss have changed to some degree.

But we're right, basically, because we allege this is a case where the wrongdoers are the investors, Cerberus and Mass Mutual who are the majority owners of the company and now the 100 percent owners of the company. They are implicated in the wrongdoing. Therefore, under the wrongdoer control test, we're going to satisfy that because there is no possible way that this company is ever going to bring the derivative claims that Mr. Davis alleges. If the board, who are the defendants in this case, decide not to bring those claims then certainly the investors who are the principle wrongdoers implicated in this are not going to permit this to go forward. And second, in terms of wrongful benefit, as both sides, experts, I think agree, if there is a conspiracy and you allege that the beneficiaries are part of that conspiracy, as the investors certainly are here because our whole case is about self-dealing on the part of the investors, then you've satisfied wrongful benefit.

CHIEF JUDGE DIFIORE: Thank you, counsel.

Counsel.

MR. ATAMIAN: Good afternoon; Jean-Marie Atamian from Mayer Brown on behalf of the appellees. Let me start out with the language of Rule 12(A). It states, quote:

2.1

from Mayer Brown on behalf of the appellees. Let me start out with the language of Rule 12(A). It states, quote:

"Once a defendant in a derivative action gives notice of intention to defend, the plaintiff must apply to the court," that's the court of the Cayman Islands, "for leave to continue the action."

JUDGE STEIN: Is there only one court of the Cayman Islands?

MR. ATAMIAN: Well, the Court of First Instance is the Grand Court of the Cayman Islands, and that's where the plaintiff here was required to go to try to get his derivative claim started.

JUDGE STEIN: So - - - so there's no question that that language is referring to the courts of the Cayman Islands. Is that - - - is what you're saying?

MR. ATAMIAN: Correct. It's a specific court in the Cayman Islands.

1	JUDGE STEIN: What about the fact that it refers
2	to "actions begun by writ"?
3	MR. ATAMIAN: And I'm not sure
4	JUDGE STEIN: Isn't that the isn't that
5	what the
6	MR. ATAMIAN: Yes. You would have to you
7
8	JUDGE STEIN: So do we bring actions in New York
9	by writ?
10	MR. ATAMIAN: No. But you have to bring i
11	you want to sue a Cayman Island company, you first have to
12	go to the Cayman Island Court and you have to make a
13	evidentiary showing to make sure that the claim is not
14	vexatious or frivolous.
15	JUDGE RIVERA: And let's say the court finds in 16	your
17	JUDGE FEINMAN: This is true only for derivative
18	actions or not direct?
19	MR. ATAMIAN: Certainly under Rule 12(A), which
20	is what we're dealing here, on on derivative actions
21	JUDGE RIVERA: Okay. And let's say the court
22	finds that, indeed, that you could proceed. What does that
23	mean? You then withdraw the action and you run over to
24	court in New York state?

MR. ATAMIAN: You have two options. Once the

1	court in the Cayman Islands has made a substantive
2	JUDGE RIVERA: Yes.
3	MR. ATAMIAN: determination after a hearing
4	with evidence if it and whatever evidence it wants,
5	it can ask for more evidence than is initially proffered,
6	then you can either proceed in that court in the Cayman
7	Islands and have your derivative claims heard there
8	JUDGE RIVERA: Well, no, but that's obvious.
9	MR. ATAMIAN: Or
10	JUDGE RIVERA: My that's not my question.
11	MR. ATAMIAN: Or you can go to New York. So
12	_
13	JUDGE RIVERA: And then and then what
14	happens in New York? Does that foreclose the the
15	defendant from filing a motion to dismiss for failure to
16	state a claim?
17	MR. ATAMIAN: No. He has his full rights in New
18	York, but first he's got to go through this gating rule.
19	JUDGE RIVERA: So what so what is the
20	point? I don't I'm not understanding, then, how it's 21	a substantive versus a procedural rule in this analysis if
22	otherwise once they get it to New York they're going to be
23	able to act as if they had not taken any action in the
24	Grand Cayman Islands.

MR. ATAMIAN: Well, that's right, but that's the price you pay when you invest millions of dollars in a Cayman Island company. You subject yourself to the law of the Cayman Islands.

JUDGE RIVERA: And how does that further - - - how does that further the substantive laws and concerns in the policy of the Cayman Islands and the Grand Caymans if desiring to proceed in the Grand Cayman courts?

2.1

MR. ATAMIAN: Well, a fundamental principle of Cayman law is to protect Cayman Island companies from being sued on corporate governance issued under the laws of different jurisdictions. And when you invest in a Cayman Island company, there is a corporate - - - indeed they've gone through all that work and you never are

JUDGE RIVERA: I'm sorry. Isn't it the same law as to whether or not you can bring the derivative suit that's going to be applied, whether it's in the Grand Caymans or in New York?

MR. ATAMIAN: No. The - - - you have to go to the Cayman court. The Cayman court is the court that makes the substantive determination after a hearing as to whether or not these derivative claims have enough merit either to proceed in the Cayman Island - - - and maybe it would have been more efficient for the plaintiff to go to the Cayman Islands first as it was required to do - - -

JUDGE RIVERA: So you're saying that

1 determination cannot be revisited in the state court? 2 MR. ATAMIAN: That's correct. Is the - - -3 JUDGE WILSON: Could they be given comity? 4 MR. ATAMIAN: That doesn't apply here because 5 you've got a substantive gating rule, Rule 12(A), like the 6 statutes in Canada - - -7 JUDGE FEINMAN: Yeah. But in terms of - - -8 trying to follow up on Judge Rivera's question. Plaintiff 9 starts an action in New York, goes to the Cayman Islands, 10 maybe not first, but simultaneously or shortly thereafter, 11 gets a ruling that says it's okay to proceed with this 12 derivative action. Is the New York court then bound to 13 accept that ruling on the rules of comity and allow the 14 action to move forward? 15 MR. ATAMIAN: If it does so timely, if the 16 plaintiff had brought its action in the Cayman Islands and 17 a Cayman court had made a merits determination that the 18 action was not frivolous then he could, yes, have pursued his claims in trial court. But now he's waited four years. 19 20 He's known about this for four years. We briefed this - -2.1 22 JUDGE FEINMAN: And I'm not talking necessarily 23 about this specific fact pattern. 24 MR. ATAMIAN: Okay. 25 JUDGE FEINMAN: I'm just talking generally to understand how this scheme is going to play out.

MR. ATAMIAN: All right. Well - - - well, these rules are fairly common in leave of court rules and demand rules. There are plenty of countries whose laws require you to go to a court of that country - - -

JUDGE FEINMAN: Well, yeah. But - - - and specifically, you know, Can- - - Canada says you can only sue in Canada and you can only do it this way, and the British Virgin Islands says you can only do it this way. But this statute doesn't say that, does it? This rule, rather, doesn't say that. It says any court.

MR. ATAMIAN: Well, this rule says that in order for someone who wants to bring derivative claims against a Cayman Island company, against a company incorporated in the Cayman Islands, must start in the Cayman Island court. It can stay in the Cayman Island court if the court finds that there is merit to the claim, or it can then go to the New York court or whatever court it wants in the United States and pursue those derivative claims.

JUDGE RIVERA: Does the - - - does Rule 12(A) anywhere set out what you've - - - what you've just articulated that this is just a decision short of writ large on whether or not the party can proceed and then they can choose what form and which to proceed? Does it - - - does it say that expressly?

MR. ATAMIAN: It doesn't - - - it doesn't 1 2 explicitly say they can then proceed wherever they want. 3 JUDGE RIVERA: But can you be sanctioned for 4 first filing in the Grand Caymans and then picking up your 5 papers and walking over to - - - or taking the boat or the 6 plane over to the New York state courts? 7 MR. ATAMIAN: No. No. And that's not the way 8 the court reads - - - the rule reads, and that's not the 9 way the courts that have interpreted 12(A) have interpreted 10 it. 11 JUDGE RIVERA: And what - - - what's the 12 experience in the court to people who file, as is required 13 by 12(A), then - - - once it - - - for those, of course, who are found to have satisfied the standard - - -14 15 MR. ATAMIAN: Yeah. 16 JUDGE RIVERA: - - - do they stay or do they go 17 to other jurisdictions? 18 MR. ATAMIAN: Well, for those who are worthy, 19 they typically continue in the Cayman Island but they also 20 have the right, as New York courts have recognized, to then 2.1 prosecute their derivative claims in New York. Other - - -2.2 another judge - - -23 JUDGE RIVERA: So - - - so have there been cases 24 in New York where someone hasn't proc- - - not this case, 25 obviously.

1	MR. ATAMIAN: Yes.
2	JUDGE RIVERA: Someone has not been able to
3	either either gone to the Grand Cayman court to
4	satisfy Rule 12(A) or hasn't satisfied it on based on
5	the evidentiary hearing and a determination by the judge
6	and then, nevertheless, been permitted to proceed in the
7	state courts?
8	MR. ATAMIAN: Well, Justice Bransten dismissed a
9	plaintiff in our capitol on exactly the same grounds for -
LO
11	JUDGE RIVERA: Yeah. I'm aware of that one. But
L2	I'm saying are there
L3	MR. ATAMIAN: Well
L4	JUDGE RIVERA: other cases that have
L5	proceeded, nevertheless?
L6	MR. ATAMIAN: On 12(A), she she gave them
L7	an opportunity to go
L8	JUDGE RIVERA: No. I I understand. I'm
L 9	sorry to interrupt you but I am aware of that case. I am
20	not asking you about that case, right. I'm asking you
21	about cases where they have proceeded in the New York
22	courts.
23	MR. ATAMIAN: There are
24	JUDGE RIVERA: Either because they haven't gone
25	to the Grand Caymans first to satisfy Rule 12(A) or they -

- - or they did go and either did or didn't satisfy the requirements that you see here?

2.1

MR. ATAMIAN: Well, this - - - this hasn't come up much because usually plaintiffs who sue a Cayman Island company start the proceeding in Cayman Island. Now in the rare cases where they have tried to skirt that rule and ignore it by starting, for example, in New York, the actions have been dismissed. Now Justice Bransten gave the plaintiffs an opportunity in that case in our capitol to go file in the Cayman Islands assuming that they weren't time barred.

JUDGE STEIN: What, if any, ramifications would there be for other circumstances, for example, the, you know, derivative demand requirements and things like that if we were to hold that this is procedural and that the New York courts can apply this common law merits test in the courts here? Are there other areas of law that would be affected by that?

MR. ATAMIAN: Well, this is an issue of corporate governance and affirmance will be a very good thing for corporations because they will provide predictability.

Corporations won't have to worry about having inconsistent judgment and inconsis- - - inconsistent rulings.

JUDGE STEIN: Well, but are - - - but we in various instances have successfully, I suppose, applied the

1	substantive law of other states or other countries in
2	in making determinations. We do that all the time. And
3	that doesn't necessarily lead to inconsistent results.
4	It's our application of some other jurisdiction's laws. So
5	why is that more problematic in this circumstance than in
6	those circumstances?
7	MR. ATAMIAN: Because then you are upending the
8	corporate governance rules of the Cayman Islands. Justice
9	Sherwood
10	JUDGE STEIN: Why? Because we're applying their
11	test.
12	MR. ATAMIAN: Well
13	JUDGE STEIN: Why would that be upending
14	that's what I'm trying to understand.
15	MR. ATAMIAN: Because because in their
16	rules they get to make the determination in the first
17	instance as
18	JUDGE FEINMAN: Well, couldn't they have written
19	the rule then that says you can only bring derivative
20	action in the Cayman Islands?
21	MR. ATAMIAN: Sure they could. But this is a
22	legislative
23	JUDGE FEINMAN: But they didn't do that, right?
24	MR. ATAMIAN: But this is a legislative matter.
25	This is the way the courts of the Cayman Island that have

1	interpreted 12(A) have held. They've all held it
2	substantive. Every New York court that's dealt with this
3	has held that it's substantive because it envelopes
4	JUDGE RIVERA: Is 12(A) a legislative rule?
5	MR. ATAMIAN: Yes, by the Cayman legislature.
6	It's part of their corporate practice.
7	JUDGE WILSON: You may have to correct a
8	misunderstanding of mine but a couple times you've
9	introduced 12(A) as if you want to sue a Cayman
10	corporation. But my understanding, which may be wrong, is
11	it applies to any lawsuit brought in the Cayman courts
12	regardless of the nationality of the corporation. Is that
13	wrong?
14	MR. ATAMIAN: Well, 12(A) if you want to
15	sue a Cayman island company
16	JUDGE WILSON: What if you want to sue a company
17	that is not a Cayman company in the Cayman Islands?
18	MR. ATAMIAN: Well, then you
19	JUDGE WILSON: Do you have to go through 12(A)?
20	MR. ATAMIAN: Well, then you would apply the law
21	of that state's court of incorporation.
22	JUDGE WILSON: So not 12(A)?
23	MR. ATAMIAN: Not 12(A). But this because this 24
25	JUDGE STEIN: Which if it's procedural

JUDGE WILSON: Are there Cayman decisions that say that?

JUDGE STEIN: Sorry.

2.1

MR. ATAMIAN: Yes. But they're - - - it's not procedural, and every court that has ruled on this issue, that has considered this issue substantively, has concluded that it is substantive. It is not procedural. It is a procedural mechanism to get before the Cayman Island court. But all of the cases that have dealt with this and all of the analogous statutes that require going to a court to get permission to sue a foreign company in another jurisdiction - - -

JUDGE RIVERA: So I'm sorry. Just to clarify, I

- - - I know I've gone over my time. With the Chief

Judge's permission, just to clarify in response to - - - to Judge Wilson's question. So - - - so a party is suing a non-Cayman Islands company. Where - - where do they start that lawsuit? Because you say Rule 12(A) doesn't apply. They just go to whatever's the court - - - the initial court?

MR. ATAMIAN: Well, you apply the internal affair doctrine, it depends where that - - - that company is incorporated. Here I have the facts before me, and it's a Cayman Island company. So you start under the Internal Affairs Doctrine by - - - by employing and applying the law of the state of incorporation.

JUDGE FAHEY: The problem - - - the problem with that is the litigation reality is is that you may be suing three or four different corporations at the same time, so you bring one lawsuit in one court. And since New York is one of the commercial capitals of the world, this has significant policy effects because you are proposing, by calling this rule substantive, that it be policy in New York that you sue - - - you're bringing - - - you're suing three different companies. First, you're suing New York. Then you have to go against your Cayman Island corporation and get permission to sue your Cayman Island corporation from the Cayman Islands. Then you can come back afterwards - - - if I understand your argument, afterwards and then continue your suit in New York applying Cayman Island law. Is that the - - - the procedure that you're outlining for us?

MR. ATAMIAN: Not really because the - - -

JUDGE FAHEY: Okay.

MR. ATAMIAN: - - plaintiff could have sued on all of its claims in the Cayman Island in the first instance. It just completely - - -

JUDGE FAHEY: Okay. But as I said, the litigation reality is quite often there are a number of parties that are being sued simultaneously, as you would recognize, and that's quite often why we end up in New York.

2.1

MR. ATAMIAN: Okay. But that could apply anywhere, and here if you want to do business with a Cayman Island company, you have to submit to the - - - the corporate law of the Cayman Islands just as if you do business with a New York corporation you think it's fair and it's reasonable that your dispute is going to be governed by New York law. That is nothing unusual just because it's Cayman Island. It could have been New York. It could have been another state.

CHIEF JUDGE DIFIORE: Thank you, sir.

JUDGE FAHEY: Thank you.

MR. ATAMIAN: Thank you.

CHIEF JUDGE DIFIORE: Mr. Brenner, if the Cayman's court makes a merits determination in plaintiff's favor, can that determination be exported to a New York court?

MR. BRENNER: I think the only merits - - - well, our position is that Rule 12(A) does not actually permit the Cayman court to determine whether or not Mr. Davis can proceed with a case in our state, and our - - and our expert is very clear on that. A plaintiff to foreign litigation cannot bring a Rule 12 application - - - 12(A) application even if it wanted to do so. There's no mechanism that permits it. The rules don't contain a process.

And to Judge Rivera's question, there are no reported cases ever under either Rule 12(A) in the Cayman Islands or under Rule - - - it's parallel Rule 12(A) in England, where this has ever happened where someone brings a case in a foreign jurisdiction, presses pause, goes down to the Cayman Islands or goes to England, gets a Rule 12(A) ruling somehow, and then if they get their ticket stamped then goes back to the original court. There's no case where there's ever happened, and it doesn't work as Mr. Halkerston says in paragraph 22, 24, 38. Their expert - -- I think we make this point in our papers - - - he had the opportunity to respond to that. Doesn't dispute it in the least so it's undisputed in the record. You can't do this, and it's a function of the very first sentence that was discussed, I think by Judge Stein, where the rule applies to every action begun by writ. Writ is like a complaint. If you start the case and file suit in the Cayman Islands, sure, then the Cayman court is going to be the one determining whether or not you can bring that case, whether you have standing as a -

JUDGE RIVERA: Does Rule 12(A) apply to non-Cayman corporations?

MR. BRENNER: It does. Absolutely it does. The rule applies to: "every action begun by writ where the 1 2 cause of action is vested in the company." Lowercase c, 3 undefined term. Again, that's in contrast to the laws in 4 Canada, contrast to the laws in the BVI where companies are 5 a defined term, the statutes. I think counsel misspoke. 6 The question was whether this is in the procedural rules or 7 the corporate rules. It is in the procedural rules. I 8 think that is undisputed. There's a dispute about how much 9 significance that takes on under Tanges, and I think what 10 Tanges says it's instructive but not dispositive. 11 JUDGE RIVERA: But it is a legislatively enacted 12 rule? 13 MR. BRENNER: There's a rules committee that I 14

MR. BRENNER: There's a rules committee that I think is established by legislative enactment - - - enactment. And interestingly, if you look at the - - - the rules establishing what the scope of the rules committee is, and Mr. Halkerston makes this point in his papers, they only have jurisdiction to establish rules of procedure for the Cayman Islands, not New York.

CHIEF JUDGE DIFIORE: Thank you, counsel. (Court is adjourned)
